

February 12th 2026, 2:32 PM

---

Is it normal to fall in love with one of my professor's voice, idk, talking with him even just homework questions makes me calm down a little. I would 100000% sign up for his therapy session if he ever offers one, I will show up 1000000000000000% to his next office hour.

There are actually a lot more reasons why someone might want to kill themselves other than depression. Things like pressure, debt, drug, or just believe they shouldn't be alive. If living is painful, then why not just end it, just like games, if the character gets stuck in the walls, doesn't the player need to respawn them? Some people might think I'm just doing it for attention, but it's actually a fucking miracle that I'm still alive at this point. I don't want people to worry about me tho so I 1000000000% won't do anything stupid in the foreseeable future. I just hope everyone, and I mean everyone, forgets about me one day so I can actually end.

So why am I still writing? idk, maybe part of me still wants to leave something behind.